

April 2-2021

My name is Crysta Hudson, over 300 of my 30 year old trees were killed by the use of the herbicide diacamba. I can't believe that anyone would relax in anyway the restrictions on this highly destructive herbicide, if anything I think because of it's destructive nature and drift ability it shouldn't be used at all.

If you allow this to go on the aftermath will be on your heads. The loss of native trees, animal habitat, personal property will be massive.

Lawsuits will ensue because people are tired of their gardens and property destroyed by this herbicide.

In the end the Plant Board should be in my opinion be held accountable for the damages incurred, because you have Knowledge of the destructive nature of this herbicide.

It's not if, it's what it will do and you know it.

Dicamba is a proven highly destructive agent and should not be used anywhere around any private dwelling, wildlife refuge, private property, specialty crops, and so on. Put simply if you can't put it and keep it only on the intended area, then don't use it.

How would you like watching all that you worked for being destroyed year by year by a invisible enemy, that you can't defend yourself from.

But then isn't that what the Plant Board suppose to do? makes you wonder. I am AGAINST the third-party request and keep restrictions in place supported by university weed scientists
